The Ulm School of Design (HfG) is regarded as the most important international design institute since the Second World War. It was founded in 1953. The former Bauhaus student Max Bill designed the architectural concept. Together with his student, Ernst Moeckel, he designed a handle for the university building in the 1950's. Griff Werk contacted his son Dr. Jakob Bill in 2012 when the university was been renovated and refurbished. This was followed by precise research and intensive development work from the support of the designer Jakob Zumbuhl and Kevin Fries. The specification of the shape of the original was to be precisely retained and, at the same time, the aim was to ensure that the handle also technically meets all 21st century requirements.
